

Everyone Pays Taxes!

Iris Fung, Paul Hager

September 23, 2018

Once upon a time, there was a group of families.
 The flock of goats
 The herd of antelopes
 The embarrassment, cupboard, bamboo of pandas
 The children of these families were bored with no place to spend time together except one others' houses.

Whenever the kids played inside they made their homes dirty :sadface:

One day, Antelope said "Let's build a sandbox!" The others eagerly agreed.

When the three visited the hardware store, the price of a sandbox was too expensive!

Each of the children asked their families if they could buy the sandbox for them,

They all decided they would save money together to purchase the

They made a special place for the money they saved to go.

Goat mowed each of their neighbor's grass, and for each lawn they contributed a portion to the sandbox.

Antelope bought an expensive hat their horns and took some of the money and put it into the chest, fund

Panda owned a tree house. A barrel, troop of monkeys [rented this tree-house and therefore] paid Panda every month to live in it. Panda took some of this money and saved it for the sandbox.

Eventually they had enough money for the sandbox and happily enjoyed their new shared playground

Goat thought it would be fun to have toys in the sandbox for everyone to use. Buying toys would require saving more money, extra money Antelope and Panda did not want to save.

Goat saved money by them self and bought the toys.

When other animals wanted to use the toys they could trade, rent for them.

Cat came and visited the sandbox and mistook it for a bathroom., Over time the sandbox got dirty and playing was less fun.

They knew they would have to save money to pay for a weekly sandbox cleaning. But they did not know how exactly.

They could raise money like the first time by saving when they worked or bought nice things, luxuries. Or they could save a little money every time they went used the sandbox.

The group decided to do both they saved less than before and when they or any other animal came and visited the sandbox;, , they paid an entry fee.

[They lived happily enjoying their shared sandbox!]

.1 Appendix

The families paid for the sandbox, the children enjoyed their new shared playground, and lived happily every after.

Bibliography

Significant credit if not direct royalties :winky: needs to be given to The Children's Illustrated Guide to Kuberbetes for inspiration. Credit also goes to Taro Gomi's Everyone Poops.